Avoid printing directly from the browser as you might end up with some weird and unwanted results trust me on this. Print out the tarot cards on your chosen paper. Make sure that you print them in the standard tarot deck size. If you're not sure that the size is right, do a test print of one card so you don't destroy the entire paper. If you printed the images on regular paper and want a good backing, then you need to use spray adhesive to glue the paper to the actual cards. Carefully trim the edges of the cards some people like rounded edges, so make sure you have enough place for the borders. Once the cards are printed, let them dry and then seal them with a varnish spray. After that, run them through a laminator. These days laminators are pretty affordable, and if you find yourself creating lots of tarot decks, you might want to invest in one.

You can also take the files to office supply stores such as Office Depot in the USA for printing and laminating. History of Women's Tarot Tarot as a keystone of the Women's Spirituality movement branches off in a different direction from the mainstream in the mid1970's. Make sure you do some reading about Pamela Colman Smith. Smith is the artist who designed the artwork for the RiderWaiteSmith deck the world's most popular tarot deck, and the one most people think of when they hear the word "tarot" in 1909. Smith based her RWS deck design on the Tarot de Marseille. Smith's creation of individual scenes on the cards of the minor arcana was a huge leap forward in tarot deck design, and contributed mightily to the enduring popularity of the RWS deck. You can see examples of her nontarot artwork here and here. Don't forget her book Susan and the Mermaid. One thing to keep in mind about Pamela Colman Smith is that she made a deliberate decision to reduce or eliminate the Christian imagery found in the early tarot decks. That practice was inspired by the death of Judas Iscariot in the Bible, where Iscariot is described as falling “headlong” Acts 118 . In the earliest tarocchi decks, the Hanged Man is depicted with bags of money, or with coins falling out of his pocket, a reference to the infamous thirty pieces of silver Iscariot was paid for betraying Jesus Christ. The World card can be seen in many churches and ancient Christian manuscripts, usually showing Christ ascending into heaven surrounded by symbols of the Four Evangelists.
